TheBELLS

A unique, outdoor theatrical extravaganza combining Theatre, Public Installation, Acrobatics, Street Performance, Dance and Music. The 45 minute performance demands enormous endurance and discipline from the performers.

At its heart, TheBELLS is a task.

The nature of the task seems elusive, however the figures attack their work with a manic, unwavering belief. The results are at once comic, triumphant, tragic and absurd.

This is the universal theme which has entranced audiences globally; regardless of cultural background, language or belief system - human beings recognise what it is to have a task to do. And an intrinsic understanding of what it means to work together to achieve something.

Campanology

noun

The art or practise of bell-ringing.

TheBELLS performance is very much a musical work. Hanging from TheBELLTOWER are five enormous ropes. Attached with a combination of bungee cords and a custom designed audio switching system- it transforms into a gigantic musical instrument. This allows the performers to shift between complex musical pieces, precise choreography and aerial chaos.

Roving

verb

gerund or present participle: roving

1. travel constantly without a fixed destination; wander.

Evoking images of the travelling circus families of yesteryear who would arrive in each town for their performance, The Bells performers, riding five black vintage bicycles, rove among the general public in the immediate area.

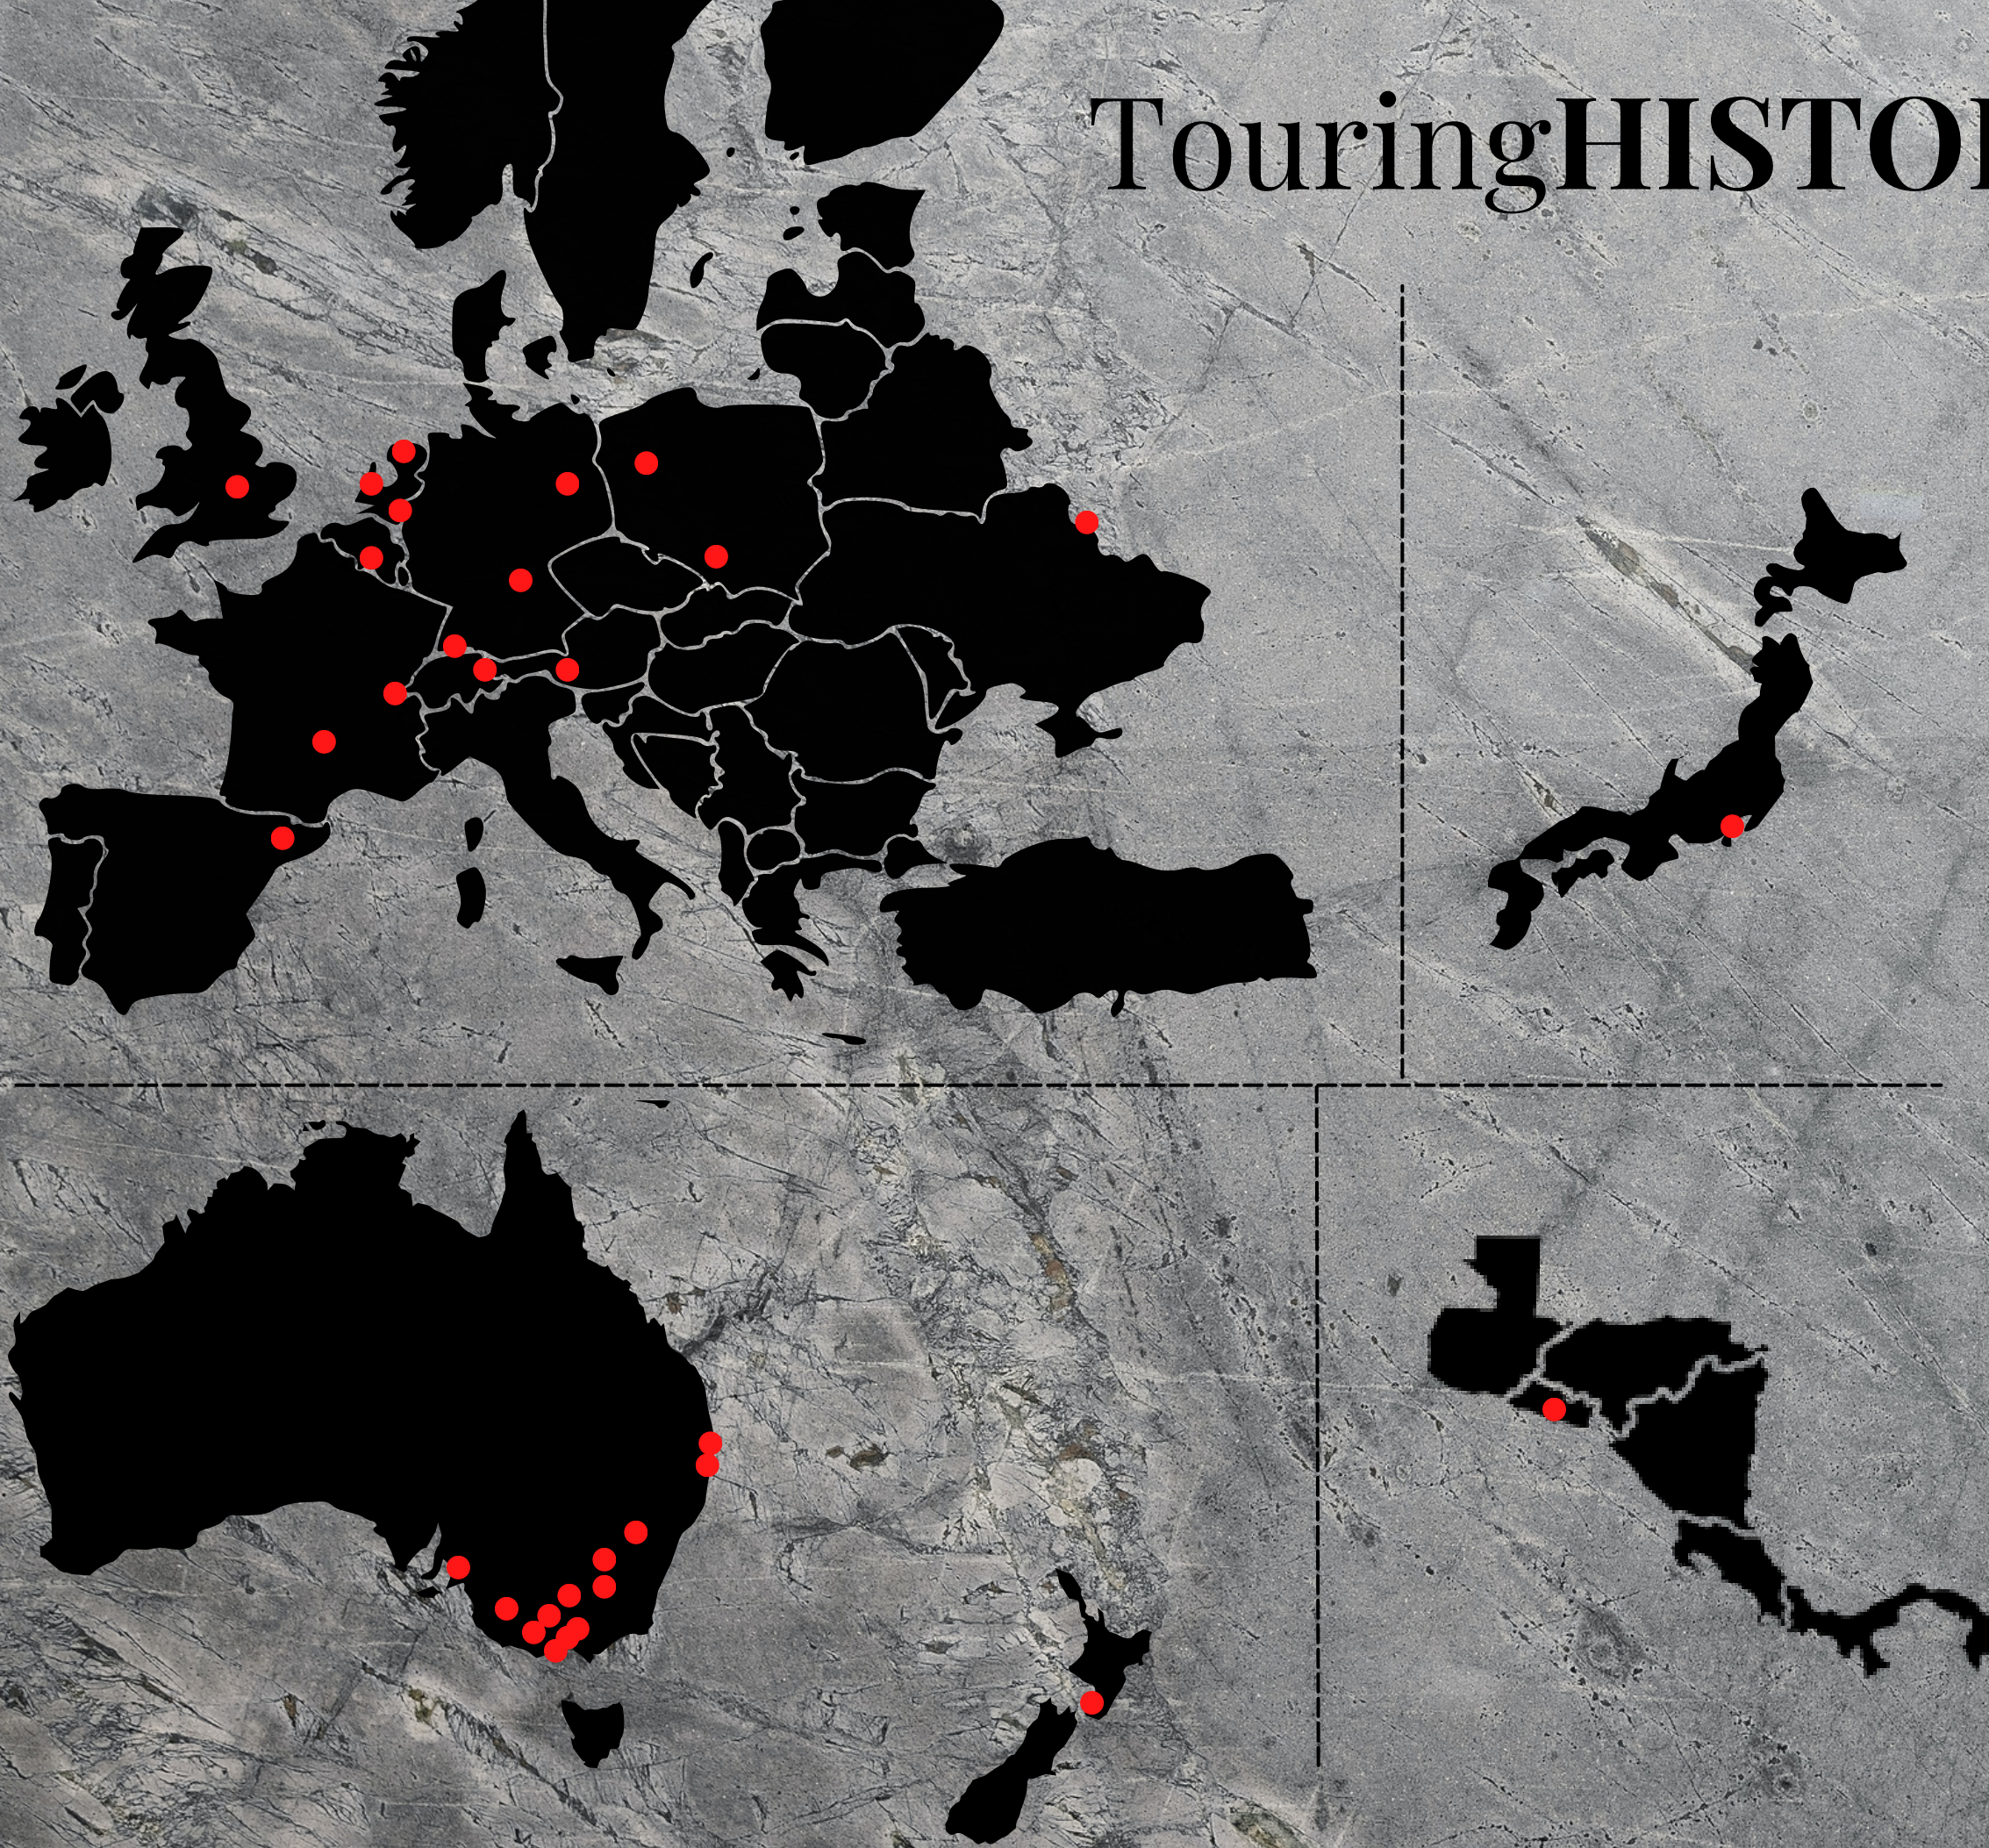

This does not come across as being aggressive or confrontational with the general public, but rather, it's about creating friendly rapport with the people nearby and inviting them to gather toward the Belltower for the coming performance.

MediaREVIEWS

'When they finish their performance, the 5ANGRYMen depart as quickly and fleetingly as they appeared. They hop on their pushbikes and leave, their hands bleeding and blistered, their jackets soaked with sweat. There is no talk about a curtain call, the eyes of the audience members are full of tears...'

Irina Miagkova | "Theatre" September issue, Moscow / 2000

'Was it acrobatics? Was it alternative theatre? Was it music? TheBELLS at Federation Square was all three. Five actors exhausting themselves by performing aerial feats while singing, acting and tolling bells, not to be missed.'

The Age | Melbourne, Australia / 2018

'This heart-stopping performance featured the unusual combination of musical bell-tolling and gravity-defying acrobatics to the delight of crowds.'

TheHUB

noun

The effective centre of an activity, region, or network.

The aerial rig that frames and supports TheBELLS can be utilised as a hub-space for a diverse range of performances, workshops, community engagement and as a stand-alone installation.

A wonderful frame that highlights and focuses any performance within its circumference, has a 360 degree component that allows for maximal visibility and can also be transposed within a range of different environments to add an element of natural and/or urban scenography.

Imagine it in a forest clearing, atop a helipad, standing on an island in the middle of a body of water or featured front and centre in the city centre or town-square

TheHUB Installation

noun

a three-dimensional visual artwork, often created for a specific place (in situ) and designed to change the perception of space.

The Belltower is a powerful architectural presence in its own right and creates a striking new landmark for events and festival precincts.

The black colour and slimline profile of the structure means that it becomes virtually invisible after dark. This makes it an ideal canvas for a lighting designers and projection artists to present their work.

This can then manifest as an exciting, new addition to the urban landscape; drawing attention to a particular festival precinct or specific public space, while serving the practical benefit of creating a well lit 'safe space' for people to gather throughout the night hours.

TheHUB Collaborators

a group of people who works jointly on an activity or project; an associate.

The Belltower is a single structure that caters for a multitude of aerial acts. Once rigged, changeover between apparatus and performances is very straightforward and the load-bearing capacity means up to five aerial acts can perform simultaneously.

Likewise the audio system that is used by The Bells may also be used for spoken word, live bands or DJ performances. Indeed, an entire programme of events can be curated.

The Actor's Ensemble Practice

WorkshopSERIES

Our company training model has been developed across a number of years and is primarily a hybrid of two key proponents of both Eastern and Western actor training methodologies: Suzuki Method for Actor's Training & Meyerhold's Biomechanics Étude Studies.

We have developed our company training system into training programme that can be delivered either as an extended masterclass format across a week, or as a month long unit to fit in with the physical theatre training curriculum of modern training institutions.

Our preferred international touring model is to deliver a workshop series before performing one of our shows. This enables us to connect with the communities in which we perform; and be able to meet the performers from multiple disciplines and backgrounds, to form new collaborative networks and, ultimately to incorporate local artists into our touring performances.
